Engg students’ Vishu gift for farmers

JESTIN ABRAHAM

As their peers press for Student Seminars across the nation, engineering students at St. Thomas College of Engineering and Technology in Thrissur are taking a different path—a startup-minded way of doing things. These students, N Liju and N Alshas, have come up with a prototype of an all-in-one tool: a Vishu season, which they believe will help cultivators all over the country. It is equipped with essential tools to help cultivators at various levels of farming, from ploughing to harvesting, weeding, irrigation, herding, milking, and weeding. It is a common scene in our locality, where cultivators are worried about the availability of machines or laborers for harvesting and other processes.
